

Becoming the Second City: Chicagos Mass News Media, 1833-1898

Becoming the Second City examines the development of Chicagos press and analyzes coverage of key events in its history to call attention to the medias impact in shaping the citys cultural and historical landscape. In concise, extensively documented prose, Richard Junger illustrates how nineteenth-century newspapers acted as accelerants that boosted the growth of Chicago in its early history by continually making and remaking the citys public image as the nations populous Second City. Highlighting the newspaper industrys involvement in the business and social life of Chicago, Junger casts newspaper editors and reporters as critical intermediaries between the elite and the larger public and revisits key events and issues including the Haymarket Square bombing, the 1871 fire, the Pullman Strike, and the Worlds Columbian Exposition in 1893.
